

NEWS

Print | E-mail to a friend

West Virginia Immunization Network receives award

April 30, 2009 @ 12:00 AM
The Herald-Dispatch

HUNTINGTON -- The West Virginia Immunization Network received the Friends of Children award on April 3 from the West Virginia chapter of American Academy of Pediatrics.

The academy presented the award at the Touma Medical Museum in Huntington. The award is presented to individuals and organizations who share the academy's dedication to the health of all children.

The Herald-Dispatch
Dr. Raheel Khan, Sharon Lansdale, Kimberly Estep, Teresa Tucker, and Dr. Fernando Indacochea accept the Friends of Children award.

Purchase this photo

Accepting the award was network co-chair Kimberly Estep of Lincoln Primary Care Center; Sharon Lansdale, president of the Center for Rural Health Development; and Teresa Tucker, executive assistant with the Center for Rural Health Development. The Center for Rural Health Development is the lead agency for the West Virginia Immunization Network, which is a statewide coalition of more than 100 public and private members.

More information about the network is available by calling 304-397-4071, e-mailing sharon.lansdale@wvruralhealth.org or visiting immunizenow.org.